Mandarin Oriental, Miami

Neighborhood: Downtown Miami/Brickell
Price Range: Expensive

The Mandarin Oriental is far enough removed from the hoopla of South Beach to be relaxing, but close enough to the action to be convenient, a distinction that makes it one of the best places to stay in Miami. If you wanted to stay here and never leave you could be perfectly content but, of course, we don't advise that given all that Miami has to offer. The property is infused with the chain's trademark Asian-inspired touches, such as bamboo floors, wooden screens and lanterns, combined with a color palette inspired by its subtropical location. The 15,000-square-foot three-level spa is elegant in an understated way, with views of the water that can't be beat (even if you can't afford to stay here, we recommend splurging on a spa treatment in a beachside cabana). For years, the two on-site restaurants, Azul and Café Sambal, have drawn a steady stream of rave reviews. There are 326 rooms that run $435-$900 double; $1,300-$6,500 per suite. For details, specials and package rates, visit the website.

The Setai

Neighborhood: South Beach
Price Range: Expensive

If you can afford the steep price tag ($950 for a studio suite in the high season; $475 per night in the off season), the Setai is the place to be. Not only is it perfectly situated in the midst of South Beach, it's also the perfect reincarnation of international art deco style with its soothing, earthy color palette and Japanese-inspired forms. The best part is that each of the suites comes appointed with full kitchens (including Lavazza espresso makers), Aqua di Parma bathroom products and washer/dryers, so if you wanted to save money by eating in you certainly have the option. The elegant spa is a lesson in relaxation, as is the garden with its reflecting pools. Three bars, two pools, 24-hour room service and a fitness center round out the amenities.

Cardozo Hotel

Price Range: Moderate

Hometown girl Gloria Estefan and her husband Emilio own this art deco hotel, one of the first to be restored to its original 1939 glory during the South Beach renaissance of the 1990s. There are 43 rooms and deluxe suites directly on Ocean Drive, and with rates starting at $170 for a double, it's a deal that can't be beat. The indoor-outdoor Cardozo Grill is a perfect place to take in a casual dinner before venturing outside the door and taking a stroll down Ocean or over to a nightclub on Collins one block over.
